KEYNOTE SPEAKER

Timothy Shanahan

Timothy Shanahan is Distinguished Professor of Urban Education at the University of Illinois at Chicago where he is Director of the UIC Center for Literacy, and chair of the Department of Curriculum & Instruction.

The Common Core State Standards claimed to specify learning outcomes only, and yet reaching these new outcomes will require big shifts in educational practice. This is particularly true with regard to English language arts curriculum and instruction. This presentation will explore the implications of these shifts to more challenging text, close reading, disciplinary literacy, informational text, and writing about reading in literature, math, social studies, and science.
