Program Description

The Oklahoma Parents as Teachers (OPAT) program has been serving families across the state since 1991. OPAT is based on the nationally validated Parent as Teachers (PAT) program, a research-based parent education program that has been validated as effective in increasing parent knowledge about cognitive development and child safety. The program is designed to foster early partnerships between home and school and to help parents learn to stimulate their children’s physical, cognitive, social-emotional, and language development. Through monthly personal visits by trained parent educators and parent group meetings, parents engage in the program’s online curriculum. According to the Parents as Teachers National Center, the curriculum “...integrates well-established information about early brain development and the role that parents play in promoting that development.”

The OPAT program is based on the philosophy that parents are their children’s first and most important teachers. The program is designed to maximize a child’s overall development during the first three years of life by laying a foundation for school success and minimizing developmental problems that interfere with the child’s learning. Other intended benefits of the program include early identification of developmental delays or sensory problems (e.g. hearing, vision) and a reduction in the number of children who require remedial and special education programs. Participation in the Oklahoma Parents as Teachers (OPAT) program is voluntary and available to all families in school districts that receive grant funds.
