Preface

This is the second edition of the popular Oklahoma Food Connection 2003: A Directory of Agricultural Producers, Crops and Institutional Buyers. We hope this updated directory will be helpful to food service staff of public and private institutions such as schools, colleges, hospitals, state parks and resorts. Restaurant chefs, caterers, public health professionals and people in Extension—anyone who wants to connect directly to Oklahoma farms growing fruits and vegetables, meats and grains—will also find this directory a useful resource.

The purpose of this directory is several-fold. First, there is a growing demand for local food from public institutions and consumers. This demand needs to be satisfied or it will simply go away. Our experience tells us that satisfying this demand can be profitable for those who are willing to adjust their production and marketing programs.

There are a number of farmers in our state willing and able to meet some of that demand. This directory lists farms who will sell directly to the public, where they are located, and what they produce. This publication also lists public schools that have expressed interest in buying local produce.

Much progress has been made since the first edition of The Food Connection was published. To recap briefly, the Oklahoma Food Policy Council, a joint project of the Kerr Center and the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food and Forestry, organized a successful farm-to-school pilot project in 2004 and 2005, which led to the 2006 passage of legislation establishing a state farm-to-school program. (For more information on the Oklahoma Farm-to-School program, see the FAQs in this publication.)

We look forward to watching this program blossom as comprehensive farm-to-school programs are established in numerous school districts around the state. We believe that farm-to-school programs, by exposing schoolchildren to fresh, nutritious locally-grown foods, will improve their eating habits (and their health) for a lifetime. We also look forward to watching the Oklahoma economy grow, particularly in rural communities, through increasing sales of locally-grown foods and locally-made value-added products.

We thank the government agencies, schools, grass roots groups and individuals who made the farm-to-school pilot successful and who worked hard for the farm-to-school legislation. We look forward to working further with these partners, as well as new ones from the fields of public health and education, to improve the diets and health of Oklahoma's schoolchildren.

Another thank you goes to the Community Foods Program of the USDA's Cooperative Research, Education and Extension Service. This update of The Food Connection is one of many activities supported by a grant from this program.

After many years of working for and with Oklahoma farmers, I find it gratifying that the concept of "local foods on local tables" is gaining currency. Many people want to help farmers remain on their land, restore rural communities, and enable children to connect with the sources of their food. We can all enjoy the fresh taste and nutrition of Oklahoma farm-fresh food. We invite you to join us in supporting farm-to-school programs as well as local markets that offer Oklahoma farm-fresh and Made in Oklahoma foods. Help us to grow healthy kids and a healthy rural economy.

Sincerely,

James E. Horne, PhD, President and CEO,
Kerr Center for Sustainable Agriculture and Chairman, Oklahoma Food Policy Council

Introduction

The Kerr Center for Sustainable Agriculture has worked on behalf of Oklahoma's family farmers for over 40 years. In recent years, the center has recognized the importance of understanding the entire food system—from field to table—and has begun to work more closely with consumers and public health advocates in an effort to bring more locally-produced foods to Oklahoma's tables.

An important part of Oklahoma's rich heritage has always been the family farm, but due to decades of consolidation and depressed commodity prices, many family farms find it difficult to make a profit. At the same time, Oklahoma's health rankings are poor, due largely to poor diets and lack of exercise.

Countering these negative trends is a new awareness on the part of state and local officials, schools, and the general public of the critical importance to Oklahoma's future of improving the health of Oklahoma's citizens, in particular, children. Complementing this awareness is a growing desire by consumers to eat more nutritious, farm-fresh foods grown locally.

While a large variety of fruits and vegetables can be grown on Oklahoma farms, the trend on the state's farms since World War II has been away from these crops towards growing a few commodities. It may be, however, that the time has come for a shift back to more diversified farms that can grow a larger percentage of the healthy foods Oklahomans need to eat.

In October of 2001 the Kerr Center launched an initiative in cooperation with the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food and Forestry. The Oklahoma Food Policy Council was formed to examine the food system in Oklahoma and see what opportunities might be found for Oklahoma farmers. Jim Horne, Kerr Center president, was named co-chair of the council.

One of the council's first actions was to conduct a survey of food service managers at 638 Oklahoma institutions: public schools, colleges and universities, vo-techs, state resorts, correctional facilities, and state hospitals.

The survey polled managers about the foods they serve and whether they would consider buying locally grown food. Survey results indicated that more than half were interested in connecting with local food producers. Of these, 77% were willing to share their contact information with area producers; one hundred twenty nine of these were schools. The survey results were published in the Oklahoma Farm-to-School Report 2003.

With the survey completed, work began on this directory. The goal was to develop both a database of state schools willing to purchase from local sellers and a database of agricultural producers who would like to sell to schools. The result was The Oklahoma Food Connection: A Directory of Agricultural Producers, Crops and Institutional Buyers, published in fall, 2003.

This updated edition, like the first edition, contains a list of producers and the crops that they grow, which may serve as "buyers' guide" for schools, other institutions or anyone interested in connecting with Oklahoma farm-fresh food. Also included is a list of farmers' markets, a harvest calendar, and information about farm-to-school programs.

For farmers, there is a list of schools and other institutions that indicated through the survey they might be interested in buying locally, and are willing to be contacted.

We hope that both schools and farms will benefit from this publication: farmers in finding new markets, and institutions in buying quality, locally produced foods at competitive prices.

The information found in the directory is true and accurate to the best of our knowledge, but is subject to change without prior notice. We encourage independent verification.

The directory is an ongoing project and will be online at the Kerr Center website www.kerrcenter.com. Updates will be made periodically. To be included, go to the website or call the Kerr Center.

How to Use the Directory

This directory consists of four sections: a list of Oklahoma farms by county, a list of crops and the farms that grow them, a list of institutions interested in buying locally grown foods, and more information on farm-to-school and food policy in Oklahoma.

SECTION I: OKLAHOMA FARMS

This list of farms is organized by county. Each entry includes the name of the farm, the nearest town, the name of the farmer and contact information, the crops grown on the farm, and whether or not it is an organic farm. Next is a list of farms that have web pages, and a list of Oklahoma's farmers' markets.

SECTION II: LIST OF CROPS AND THE FARMS THAT GROW THEM

This section provides a list of crops from A-Z. The list includes fruits, vegetables, meats, dairy, eggs, herbs, honey, mushrooms, jams/jellies and grains such as wheat and products made from wheat. Under each crop, farms that grow it are listed by county. The contact information for a particular farm can then be located in the Oklahoma Farms section.

Also included in this section is a harvest calendar of selected crops and a tally of the number of farms growing each crop. The calendar will help buyers plan purchases.

SECTION III: DIRECTORY OF INSTITUTIONS

The directory of institutions lists institutions that have expressed an interest in buying local produce from farmers. The majority of these are public schools, but several colleges, technology schools, state resorts and technology schools are also listed.

The directory of institutions section is formatted in the same way as the farm list, by county and city, with contact information.

SECTION IV: COMMUNITY FOODS

The final section contains Farm-to-School Frequently Asked Questions, and information about the Kerr Center, and the USDA Community Foods Grant Program.

Farm-to-School: FAQs

WHAT IS FARM-TO-SCHOOL?

Farm-to-school programs feature school purchases of food (usually fresh fruits and vegetables) from local farmers. Nutrition lessons are often coordinated with the fresh produce being served for lunch. Programs can also include Ag-in-the-Classroom curriculum, school gardens, food tastings and cooking classes, and farm/farmer visits, all of which get kids excited about healthy food.

HOW DO FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAMS CONTRIBUTE TO CHILDREN'S HEALTH?

Farm-to-school programs contribute to children's health by helping kids develop healthy eating habits that will last a lifetime.

According to research into existing farm-to-school efforts, students choose significantly more servings of fruits and vegetables when given the choice of high quality, farm-fresh produce.

When they are well-nourished, children learn better.

WHY WOULD FARM-TO-SCHOOL BE GOOD FOR KIDS IN OKLAHOMA?

During the last 30 years in Oklahoma, the percentage of overweight children (ages 6-11) has quadrupled, while adolescent rates have more than doubled. Doctors blame poor eating habits for this "obesity epidemic." High sugar, high fat "fast foods" are being blamed. Obesity can contribute to serious lifelong conditions such as diabetes and heart disease.

While Oklahoma kids are consuming more calories than they need, they are not eating enough servings of fruits and vegetables. Only 15% of Oklahoma adults eat five or more servings of fruits and vegetables per day, ranking the state dead last in the nation.

Because Oklahoma kids eat lunch at school and many eat breakfast there as well, schools have a unique opportunity to improve the nutrition of the children they serve.

CAN YOU REALLY GET KIDS TO EAT FRUITS AND VEGETABLES?

Several research studies have shown that kids will eat more fruits and vegetables when they have easy access to a variety of high quality fresh items, often on a salad bar where they have a lot of choice. Kids from different socio-economic levels respond similarly.

Research and the experience of educators has also established that kids are more likely to eat fruits and vegetables, especially unfamiliar items, if they participate in fun educational activities featuring these foods.

ARE FRESH FRUITS AND VEGETABLES MORE NUTRITIOUS THAN FROZEN OR CANNED?

Fresh fruits and vegetables are highly nutritious. Fresh produce is often highest in key vitamins and minerals.

Nutritionists believe that because fresh produce looks appetizing, has an appealing texture, and often tastes much better than processed, that people are more likely to eat it and improve their overall nutrition.

FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAMS FEATURE LOCALLY GROWN FOOD. WHAT DOES LOCALLY GROWN MEAN?

Locally grown usually means grown nearby. Often it includes anything grown in a given state.

WHY IS LOCALLY GROWN PRODUCE BETTER THAN PRODUCE GROWN ELSEWHERE?

Because locally grown produce is likely harvested at peak ripeness and brought to the consumer in the shortest time possible, it is often of the highest quality — attractive to the eye, with pleasant odor, flavor, texture and feel—and if handled properly, with high nutritive value. People are more likely to consume fresh fruits and vegetables when they are of high quality.

HOW ARE FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAMS GOOD FOR FARMERS?

Farm-to-school opens up a large new market for farmers. The potential for significant sales exists: in North Carolina, for example, farmers sold $500,000 worth of fresh fruits and vegetables to state schools in 2004-2005. In Oklahoma, according to one estimate, farmers could sell $6 million worth of fruits and vegetables to schools.

HOW WIDESPREAD ARE FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAMS?

Programs exist in 400 school districts in 23 states, including Oklahoma. The Oklahoma Food Policy Council (a joint project of the Kerr Center and the Okla. Dept. of Agriculture) has spearheaded the Oklahoma program. The motto of the Oklahoma farm-to-school program is "growing healthy kids and a healthy rural economy."

WHICH OKLAHOMA SCHOOLS HAVE A FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAM?

Four school districts (Broken Arrow, Edmond, Shawnee, and Tahlequah) participated in a pilot project in the 2004/2005 school year. In 2005/2006, Tulsa and Muskogee were added to the four. The districts bought Oklahoma-grown seedless watermelons and served them during the first few weeks of school. The Oklahoma Ag-in-the-Classroom program created a fun and educational “watermelon curriculum” to be used in conjunction with the lunchtime watermelon.

WAS THE OKLAHOMA PILOT PROGRAM SUCCESSFUL?

School food service directors in the six districts reported that the melons were of high quality—“The best she ever ate,” was how Broken Arrow food service director Jill Poole put it. The melons were delivered in good condition, in a timely manner.

By all accounts, the melons were extremely popular with kids, teachers, and food service. Several schools received extensive positive media coverage for the farm-to-school watermelons.

ARE OTHER OKLAHOMA SCHOOLS INTERESTED IN FARM-TO-SCHOOL?

In 2002, the Oklahoma Food Policy Council devised and mailed out the “Oklahoma Institutional Food Service Survey” to 545 schools in the state. About 72% of the food service directors contacted replied, a very high response rate to a mailed survey.

Of those, over 2/3 indicated they would make local purchases provided “competitive price and quality and an available local source.” More than half said they would consider local purchases if they could purchase small quantities, and more than half wanted to make contact with local food sources.

Of the one-fourth of respondents who had made local purchases, over four-fifths said they would be willing to make them again.

HOW CAN PEOPLE FIND OUT MORE ABOUT THE OKLAHOMA FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAM?

Extensive information is available at the Kerr Center website or by calling the Kerr Center. The Oklahoma Food Connection, a directory of farmers, school food service, and available crops is also online online.

HOW DO FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAMS FIT INTO THE SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM?

Locally grown food can be offered as part of a hot lunch, breakfast, as snacks or in some schools is offered on a salad bar.

HOW DOES THE SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM WORK?

The school lunch program is federally funded. School districts are reimbursed for every school meal they sell. Reimbursements fall into three categories-free, reduced, and full price.

WHERE DO SCHOOLS GET THE MONEY TO BUY LOCALLY GROWN PRODUCE AS PART OF A FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAM?

School food service directors can purchase locally grown produce with the same federal reimbursement money that they use to buy all their food items. Schools also get a small amount of money to purchase locally-grown fresh fruits and vegetables through a special Dept. of Defense/USDA partnership that is part of the school commodity program (The DOD program is currently being reorganized and may not be available in the future).

HOW DID THE OKLAHOMA PILOT PROGRAM WORK?

The watermelons were purchased using commodity funds through the USDA/Dept. of Defense (DoD) Farm-to-School program. DoD worked with an Oklahoma farmer who is part of their extensive produce procurement network. The participating schools placed their orders through the Dept. of Human Service Commodity Division. The orders went to DoD, which found the grower, and guaranteed the quality and price. Thomas Bros. Produce, a produce vendor who already sells to many schools in Oklahoma, delivered the melons.

IS THE DOD PROGRAM THE ONLY AVENUE SCHOOLS HAVE TO PURCHASE LOCALLY GROWN FOODS?

No. Schools can buy directly from farmers, from farmers' markets, through an existing distributor or broker who procures from local farmers, or from a growers' cooperative.

IS THERE ANY FEDERAL ASSISTANCE THAT SCHOOLS MAY GET TO INSTITUTE A FARM TO SCHOOL PROGRAM?

The 2002 farm bill contains language that directs the USDA to encourage food service directors to buy from regional farmers when possible. A federal farm-to-cafeteria assistance program has been authorized but not been funded.

WHAT HAVE OTHER STATES DONE TO ESTABLISH SUCCESSFUL FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAMS?

Several states have found that a coordinator is very helpful in getting the program up and running. North Carolina, Massachusetts, New Mexico, and Washington have farm-to-school coordinators who facilitate their programs, as do some school districts, such as Santa Fe, New Mexico. Establishment of such a program in Oklahoma is pending. California has recently passed legislation funding greater procurement of California-grown fruits and vegetables. In North Carolina, the state provided $1,000 “start-up” grants the first year to 50 schools to make purchases from NC farmers; $500 in the second year. The program is now operating successfully without grant funding.

HOW HAS FARM-TO-SCHOOL IN OKLAHOMA BEEN FUNDED SO FAR?

Using grant money and volunteer time, the Oklahoma Food Policy Council, with support from state agencies and OSU, devised and conducted a survey of school food service directors in 2002-3 and then organized a farm-to-school pilot project in 2004 and 2005. Results were published in the Oklahoma Farm-to-School Report. This effort was supported by the USDA Risk Management Agency, Community Outreach and Assistance Partnership Program.

The Oklahoma Departments of Human Services (Commodity Division), Agriculture, and Education, as well as the U.S. Dept. of Defense and USDA Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) worked with the council on the pilot project.

In 2004 the USDA FNS provided grants to the school districts purchase the Oklahoma-grown watermelons. In 2005, the districts used their own DoD Farm-Fresh commodity funds to purchase the watermelons. In 2005 and 2006, the Kerr Center, with support from the USDA's Community Foods Project, has provided staff time and expertise to promote and organize a farm-to-school initiative in the state.

DO OKLAHOMA SCHOOL DISTRICTS NEED MORE ASSISTANCE TO IMPLEMENT FARM-TO-SCHOOL?

The initial grants funding the pilot program are no longer available. The Oklahoma Dept. of Education Child Nutrition Program has initiated educational outreach to school food service directors about farm-to-school. The Oklahoma Food Policy Council believes that with more support from the state, the Oklahoma farm-to-school program could be expanded to include more schools, more produce items, more farmers, and more food and nutrition education. In May 2006, the Oklahoma legislature responded to this need by establishing an Oklahoma Farm-to-School program, with a coordinator located at the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food and Forestry.

HOW COULD AN EXPANDED FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAM BENEFIT OKLAHOMA FARMERS?

The 2005 pilot program involving just six school districts spent over $20,000 on Oklahoma-grown watermelons. These kinds of local sales keep dollars in Oklahoma and benefit communities across the state.

A farm-to-school program could potentially benefit farms of various sizes. Large school districts may be a good market for larger quantities of fruits and vegetables already grown on a commercial scale in Oklahoma, such as watermelons. Smaller-scale local farms could connect with small and medium-sized schools in the state.

A new market for Oklahoma farm products could spur farm diversification, encouraging Oklahoma farms to grow a greater diversity of crops that could be sold to schools. Farm-to-school could also spur technology and research to help fruit and vegetable growers in the state become more productive.

A robust state farm-to-school program might also benefit Oklahoma food processors and farmers who grow commodity crops. An example would be Oklahoma wheat processed within the state into healthy bread products and sold to Oklahoma schools.

SINCE THE GROWING SEASON AND THE SCHOOL YEAR DON'T COMPLETELY COINCIDE, HOW CAN FARM-TO-SCHOOL WORK IN OKLAHOMA?

No one is suggesting that Oklahoma farmers can supply all the fresh fruits and vegetables schools use. We do not have the climate to grow some crops (oranges, for example) that schools want. But many other crops that schools use or could use are already grown commercially in the state and can be harvested in the spring or fall. Watermelons are a good example: Oklahoma is ranked #12 nationally in watermelon production, but until recently the melons were not sold in large amounts to Oklahoma schools.

In greenhouses or under plastic, the seasons for other crops can be extended. Summer food programs could incorporate a wide diversity of Oklahoma-grown fruits and vegetables.

WHAT OKLAHOMA-GROWN CROPS COULD BE SERVED IN OKLAHOMA SCHOOLS?

In a 2002 survey, school food service directors indicated they might purchase tomatoes, cucumbers, onions, lettuce, eggs, potatoes, melons, strawberries as well as ground beef, cheese and dairy products locally.

ISN'T FRESH PRODUCE HARD TO HANDLE?

In a survey of food service, about 25% of respondents indicated that lack of staffing or facilities may be a barrier to prepping large amounts of fresh produce. While not quite as easy to handle as opening a can, many fresh fruits and vegetables can be served either raw or cooked, making them more versatile than some canned or frozen items.

DOES FRESH PRODUCE HAVE TO BE INSPECTED BY THE DEPT. OF AGRICULTURE BEFORE SCHOOLS CAN USE IT?

No inspections are required of fresh, raw produce. Processed items have to follow food safety procedures established by the county or state.

WHAT ARE SOME OF THE BARRIERS TO A WIDESPREAD FARM-TO-SCHOOL PROGRAM BEING IMPLEMENTED IN OKLAHOMA?

On the farm side, some produce items require immediate cooling after being harvested and some farmers lack this capacity. Farmers need information about what schools want, procurement policy, and in general what they need to do to make ordering from them convenient for food service.

On the school side, food service directors are doing the best they can to serve nutritious food on tight budgets. They lack information about how best to connect with farmers and procure farm-fresh foods. Teachers need educational activities and ag/nutrition curriculum to implement.

Distribution issues, quality standards and other issues need to be addressed for both sides to effectively connect in a farm-to-school program.

CAN THESE BARRIERS BE OVERCOME?

Farm-to-school efforts in Oklahoma have been given a promising start by the Oklahoma Food Policy Council. However, school districts need information about buying and using locally grown produce and assistance in expanding food and nutrition programs. Farmers also need information about connecting with local schools. A concerted effort is needed to expand the program and make it an effective tool in the fight to improve children's health.

If Oklahomans are willing to commit some of the state's resources to "jump-start" this effort, a viable farm-to-school program can be created in Oklahoma that will greatly benefit both schoolchildren and farmers. Other states have made this commitment; if Oklahoma too embraces a comprehensive farm-to-school program, it will be in the forefront of innovative efforts to address childhood obesity and improve children's health for the better.

Kerr Center for Sustainable Agriculture: FAQs

WHAT IS THE KERR CENTER FOR SUSTAINABLE AGRICULTURE?

The Kerr Center is a 501c(3) non-profit educational foundation established in 1985. The home office, farm, and ranch are located near Poteau in southeastern Oklahoma. The Kerr Center also operates the Overstreet-Kerr Historical Farm and Museum near Sallisaw, Oklahoma.

HOW WAS THE KERR CENTER CREATED?

The Kerr Foundation was established in 1965 from the estate of Senator Robert S. Kerr. The agricultural division of that entity served farmers and ranchers in southeastern Oklahoma with information and educational activities until 1985.

In that year, the Kerr Foundation was separated into four new foundations. The “ag division” became the Kerr Center for Sustainable Agriculture, continuing its primary work of educational outreach, but with a new focus on helping family farms statewide become more sustainable—more environmentally sound as well as economically viable.

HOW IS THE KERR CENTER SUPPORTED?

The Kerr Center operates on the earnings from its own endowment, as well as grants and donations. Individuals and organizations may donate through the Friends of the Kerr Center program.

WHAT ARE THE KERR CENTER PROGRAMS?

Current programs are: Education/Communications, Oklahoma Producer Grants, Public Policy, Stewardship Farm, and the Overstreet-Kerr Historical Farm. The Kerr Center also administers the Professional Development Program of the USDA Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education (SARE) program, Southern region, the first non-governmental group to do so. The center's Community Foods Program and its farm-to-school initiative are supported by a grant from the USDA's Cooperative Extension Service.

The Oklahoma Food Policy Council is a joint project of the Kerr Center and the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food, and Forestry.

WHO IS ON STAFF?

Professional staff members have expertise in agricultural economics, horticulture, biology/ecology, animal science, public policy, law, journalism/communications, and business.

WHAT ARE THE KERR CENTER'S EDUCATIONAL OFFERINGS?

The center offers a variety of educational publications and educational events to farmers and ranchers and those interested in sustainable food and farming systems. The quarterly newsletter Field Notes is free. The Kerr Center book, The Next Green Revolution: Essential Steps to a Healthy, Sustainable Agriculture, is used worldwide. The Kerr Center website (www.kerrcenter.com) has complete information on programs, publications, and events.

WHAT ARE THE VALUES BY WHICH THE KERR CENTER IS GOVERNED?

The Kerr Center believes that a sustainable agriculture must be socially equitable, profitable for producers and ecologically sound. The Kerr Center values and supports the family farm structure of agriculture, a fair playing field for independent farmers and ranchers, public research for the public domain, the enhancement and protection of natural resources, respect for nature, and local/regional food systems that enhance local economies.

WHAT IS ITS MISSION STATEMENT?

The mission of the Kerr Center is to assist in developing sustainable food and farming systems by:

Supporting farms that provide a perpetual stream of economic goods and ecological/environmental benefits, and which enhance the quality of life of farm families, rural residents and society as a whole;

Promoting markets made up of independently owned and operated farms and firms of a scale appropriate to offer a wide variety of product choices for consumers and economic opportunities for existing and beginning farmers;

Encouraging communities to protect the land from misuse, exploitation, and unfettered urban development, to ensure inclusion and equality of opportunity for all; to promote community food security; and support economic development from within;

Proclaiming the need for a culture that respects the earth and all of its diversity of life, and recognizes the physical, social and spiritual connections between people within a higher order of things.

USDA Cooperative State Research, Education and Extension Service: Community Food Projects

BUILDING A FOUNDATION FOR COMMUNITY FOOD SECURITY IN OKLAHOMA

In 2004, the Kerr Center received a three-year grant from the Community Foods Grant Program. The funded project titled "Building a Foundation for Food Security in Oklahoma" will enable the Kerr Center and the Oklahoma Food Policy Council to work with diverse groups to craft comprehensive responses to pressing food, farm and nutrition issues in the state. Oklahoma has high rates of poverty, food insecurity and hunger. Oklahomans, including schoolchildren, are experiencing an obesity epidemic and rank near the bottom of nutrition indicators. Many of Oklahoma's small farms and rural communities continue to struggle economically.

The overarching goal of the project is to help Oklahomans understand and establish sustainable local food systems, mutually beneficial to both consumers and producers, through which people of all ages and income levels can access and regularly eat nutritious, locally-grown food produced profitably and sustainably by small and medium-sized family farms.

Project activities will include a state food system assessment and food security educational campaign, nutritional outreach, curriculum/activities on food and farming for schoolchildren and teachers, and farm-to-school programs and information guides.

The project will bring together groups from sectors (agriculture, health and education) that have not previously worked closely together, creating a critical mass of energy, expertise and enthusiasm that will lead to positive change.

COMMUNITY FOOD GRANTS

The USDA's Community Food Projects Competitive Grant Program (CFPCGP) has existed since 1996 as a program to fight food insecurity through developing community food projects that help promote the self-sufficiency of low-income communities.

Community Food Projects are designed to increase food security in communities by bringing the whole food system together to assess strengths, establish linkages, and create systems that improve the self-reliance of community members over their food needs.

The 1996 Federal Agriculture Improvement and Reform

Act (FAIR) established new authority for federal grants to support the development of Community Food Projects, and the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 re-authorized the program. The program is designed to:

- Meet the needs of low-income people by increasing their access to fresher, more nutritious food supplies.
- Increase the self-reliance of communities in providing for their own food needs.
- Promote comprehensive responses to local food, farm, and nutrition issues.

Additionally, projects should:

- Meet specific state, local, or neighborhood food and agricultural needs for infrastructure improvement and development.
- Plan for long-term solutions.
- Create innovative marketing activities that mutually benefit agricultural producers and low-income consumers.

Preferred projects also develop linkages between two or more sectors of the food system, support the development of entrepreneurial projects, develop innovative linkages between the for-profit and nonprofit food sectors, encourage long-term planning activities, and build the long-term capacity of communities to address the food and agricultural problems of communities, such as food policy councils and food planning associations.

These grants are intended to help eligible private nonprofit entities that need a one-time infusion of federal assistance to establish and carry out multipurpose community food projects. Projects are funded from $10,000-$300,000 and from 1 to 3 years. They are one-time grants that require a dollar-for-dollar match in resources. Approximately 18 percent of the submitted proposals have received awards during the history of this program. Funds have been authorized through the year 2007 at $5 million per year.

The Food Connection 2006 was supported by the Community Foods Projects Program of the USDA Cooperative State Research, Education and Extension Service, grant # 2004-33800-1514.
